Sewing Together Life After Shingles

Christine S. Harding

*Program Director, Community Health Education
The National Council on Aging (NCOA)*

Christine Harding has led NCOA's Community Health Education program for the past two years, leading campaigns to educate older Americans on diabetes, hypertension, Medicare preventive benefits, shingles and peripheral arterial disease.

Prior to joining the NCOA, she led her own business assisting clients in many areas of mass communications, including advertising, journalism, health communication, marketing, media and public relations and television production. She has provided these services to government and non-government entities, non-profit organizations, medical institutions, public interest organizations, associations and trade groups, public relations, and public affairs organizations, among others.

Christine began her career at J. Walter Thompson Advertising Agency in New York City, NY and also worked at EUE Screen Gems, Ltd., a television and film commercial production facility also located there. She later spent several years working in television, including ABC's "Good Morning America", ABC News, Special Reports Television and Channel One News.

She received a Bachelor of Science in Mass Communication from Emerson College in Boston, Mass.
